Narrative Reading Learning Progression Grade 5 Grade 3 Grade 4 LITERAL COMPREHENSION I preview a book's title, cover, back I preview to begin figuring out I preview the book to begin figuring Orienting blurb, and chapter titles so I can the characters, setting, and main out not only the setting and figure out the characters, the setting, storyline. I also use what I know characters, but also the possible and the main storyline (plot). about this kind of fiction to set themes. I am alert, early on, to clues me up to look for things that will about the themes and issues that will probably be important (e.g., in become significant. historical fiction, I plan to learn about I also use what I know about this the time period; in mystery, I'm alert genre to set me up to look for things to clues). that will probably be important (e.g., in fantasy, I'm expecting to learn about the characters' quest). Themes I make a mental movie as I read. I I make a mental movie as I read, I make a mental movie as I read, Envisioning/ imagine the setting, the characters, trying to experience the story as if it trying to experience the story as if it Predicting the events, and characters' reactions is real life. is real life. to them. I draw on earlier parts of the text I draw on earlier parts of the text to I predict what the main character to add to the details in my mental add to details in my mental movie of will do, say, and think (and how the movie. That is, I draw on what I the characters, setting, and events. character will react to things) based know about characters' traits and I look for clues to help me know the on earlier parts of the text. motivations, the setting, and the mood and the feel of the actions. I events to envision and predict. I also also use what I know from real life I can explain the reasons for my use what I know from real life about about what these places tend to look predictions. what these places tend to look and and feel like. feel like. I also base my predictions on what I also base my predictions on my I know about this genre of fictional sense of how stories tend to go and can explain my reason for my I predict not just what will happen predictions. to the main character, but also to the secondary characters across multiple plotlines.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression

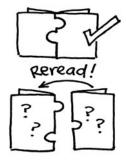

Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5

LITERAL COMPREHENSION

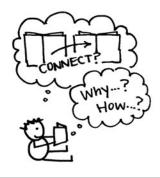

Monitoring for Sense Fitting the Pieces Together I expect the story to make sense, and when it does not, I use fix-up strategies such as rereading and asking questions, including the 5 Ws. To regain my grip on the storyline, I recall the sequence of events, often trying to sort through what the main character really wants, the problems he or she confronts, and ways the character rises to those challenges.

I read, expecting the parts of the story to fit together in such a way that I can understand why things are happening. When things don't seem to fit—if they feel as if they come out of nowhere—I check to see if I missed something important.

I realize that in more complicated stories, I sometimes have to wait longer for the parts to fit together or for things to become clear. If I'm unsure how a new chapter or part fits with the earlier story, I'm aware that my confusion may be caused by gaps in time or place or shifts in point of view. I may be reading a subplot that brings a minor character on stage. At these points, I may reread to figure out how the parts of the story fit together, but I may also read on with questions in mind.

Story Elements: Time, Plot, Setting

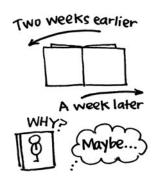

I keep track of what is happening and how much time goes by in a story. Is it one day? One week? One year?

I can tell where the story takes place.

As I read, I'm alert to the structure of a story, aware that it is not always told sequentially. I note sequence words (e.g., Two weeks earlier... Thinking back, I remembered... or A week later...) that clue me in to the presence of a backstory or gaps in time between scenes. I know that when the story goes backward, it is usually to give me important information.

I can tell when the setting changes.

As I read, I'm alert to ways in which more complicated stories are not always told sequentially. I note backstory, gaps in time between scenes, flashback and flash-forward, and subplots. I'm aware that subordinate characters may support subplots.

I can make sense of unfamiliar settings.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5 LITERAL COMPREHENSION If a character is telling the story (in If a character is telling the story (in I expect that no matter whose point Establishing the "I" voice), I ask, "Who is telling this the "I" voice), I ask, "Who is telling this of view the story is told from, many Point of View story?""Who is the narrator?" story?""Who is the narrator?" characters' perspectives will be important to understanding this If this is not in the first person, I ask, If this is not in the first person, I ask, story. "Who is the main character? Whose "Who is the main character? Whose point of view am I hearing?" point of view am I hearing?" I expect that characters' or narrators' accounts or opinions may be different, and I will have to figure out MAIN who's telling how to make sense of those different Point this story? perspectives. who is the MAIN character? I can read in my head and aloud The way my voice sounds (whether I pay attention to what's happening Fluency in ways that help my listeners and in my head or out loud) is mostly in the story and make sure my voice The sound of me understand the story (e.g., based on what is going on in the reflects the mood of the scene, my voice changing my voice to show dialogue story and on what each character is the emotions of the characters, or a character's feelings). The new thinking, feeling, or experiencing. and the kind of people they are work I'm doing now is that I can do It might also be based on what I've (slowing down when it gets scary, for this even when I'm reading longer learned about characters and the example). I do this with both prose sentences. kind of people they are. and poetry. conclusion

Narrative Reading Learning Progression Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5 LITERAL COMPREHENSION When I read dialogue, I can make Punctuation steers my reading, but it Usually punctuation just gives me Punctuation it sound like a character is really is not something I have to think a lot subtle signals as to how to read, but and Sentence talking. about. However, when sentences are sometimes it's used in unusual ways, Complexity complex, the punctuation can help in which case I ask, "How does the I use punctuation as a road signal me figure out how to read them. author probably want this part to that helps me know when to pause. sound?" Also, when reading complex I can do this with longer, more sentences, I adjust my voice to show complex sentences now. that some parts of the sentence (like this part) are meant as small additions. How does the author want this to sound? Word Work When I try to figure out the meaning When I try to figure out the meaning When I try to figure out an unknown of a tricky word or phrase, I read of an unknown word or phrase, I read word or phrase, I continue to ask Word Solving around the word, looking for clues to around it. I use clues from the story questions, such as "Is the word what it might mean. to help me think about whether the positive or negative? Moderate word is positive or negative and to or extreme? An idiom? Is there I also look inside the word, relying on notice whether there is an example an example? Might there be a what I know about parts of words. later that can help me figure it out. secondary meaning for the word or I know that authors play with words. one I'm not familiar with?" I use what I know about prefixes, I ask, "Could this word or phrase suffixes, and root words. I use all I know about phonics, Greek/ mean something funny or special Latin root words, prefixes, and (e.g., 'The path snakes . . .' or 'His eyes When the author has used suffixes. were glued to the clock . . .')?" language in unusual ways—maybe describing one thing by comparing I expect to see similes and it to another—I figure out what the metaphors, especially when the phrase probably means. author compares the emotions of a character to something else or tries to establish the tone or mood of a setting. Could this mean something

Narrative Reading Learning Progression Grade 3 Grade 5 Grade 4 LITERAL COMPREHENSION When talking about a character, I I not only use precise language I speak and write about books in Building reach for the more accurate word for to describe characters, I also use academic ways (not only using words Vocabulary a trait. literary language—words like genre, for story elements but also for craft narrator, setting, and so on—when moves, e.g., focus, perspective). talking about story elements. story element Retelling/ As I read a novel, I can think back As I read a novel, I can think back I make decisions about how to over and briefly summarize the parts over and briefly summarize the parts summarize a story. Sometimes I Summary/ of the story that relate to what I'm of the story that relate to what I'm name a theme and then summarize Synthesis reading. the most important parts of the story Within Text that support that theme. Sometimes When I finish a book, I can briefly When I finish a book, I can briefly I trace the significant changes in a summarize it in a way that shows summarize it in a way that shows character. I stay focused on the parts what I know about the story and knowledge of the important of the story that are most important its story elements. I talk about the aspects of the story, including the to the kind of summary I am giving, characters—their traits and wants story elements. I talk about the leaving out parts that are not. and recap especially important characters—their traits and wants events using sequence words. and recap important events using Alternatively, I may talk about the sequence and cause-effect words or problem and solution. using a problem-solution structure. If the character learned a life lesson, I talk about the big ideas/themes I mention that, most likely at the end that the story teaches. of my summary. CHARACTERS BIG EVENTS ROBLEM + SOLUTION

LESSON

Narrative Reading Learning Progression Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5 INTERPRETIVE READING I can develop ideas (theories) about I keep in mind that characters are I can see places in a story where the Inferring the kind of person a character is. I complicated. For example, I might characters are not what they seem about know this means talking about a think about how the character is at first. For example, the charac-Characters character's traits (personality), and different on the outside than the ter might say or act as if he or she and Other I'm careful not to confuse the way a inside or in one part of the story or in doesn't care, but readers see signs Story that he or she really does. That is, I character feels for a trait. one relationship than another. see hidden sides to characters. Elements When a character makes a decision I'm interested in what really drives and does something, I can usually a character to make the decisions I know that what drives the char-Character figure out why, based on what I or take the actions he or she takes. acter (his or her motivation) can be Traits know of the character and what What does the character really want? complicated. There may be several happened earlier. things that drive or pressure a char-I know that a character's action will acter, and often he or she is pulled in sometimes seem small (closing conflicting ways. a door) but will actually signal a deeper meaning. Character I notice how a character changes I notice how a character changes I can notice small, subtle changes in across the story (for example, across the story. characters in addition to more obvi-Response/ the character's feelings, traits, ous ones. I know that the causes of I think about many possible causes Change motivations, or behaviors might these changes may also be subtle or of these changes, including other complicated. story elements (the problem, the I think about what key moment(s) setting, other characters, and so on). I think about how a character's in the story caused the character to change is important to the whole I know that what a character learns change. about life can often be the theme of I am aware that characters can reprea story. sent ways that people can be—the bully who is insecure, the boy with feelings locked inside—and that when a character changes or learns something, this can teach readers about ways that people like that char-This matters acter deal with challenges or issues.

Supporting
Thinking with
Text Evidence

I support my ideas with details from the text.

I support my ideas with details from several parts of the text.

I discuss how those details actually do support my ideas.

I support my ideas with specific details and quotes from several parts of the story. I select these because they are strong and they actually do match my points.

I discuss how those details and citations support my ideas.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression
	Grade 3	Grade 4	Grade 5
INTERPRETIVE READING
Determining Themes/ Cohesion	At the end of a story, I can say a few sentences about the big life lesson (the theme) that a character has learned.	I read, asking, "What's this story really about?" and I come up with tentative ideas that I test as I read on. I have an internalized checklist of what makes a good interpretation—that the theme applies to most of the story, that it suggests a life lesson. I know that often the theme becomes most clear at the end, but then I can look back and see the theme trace through other parts, such as times when a character makes a decision or realizes something big.	I read, asking, "What seem to be the big themes of this story?" I can figure out a couple of themes that are especially significant, noting which are best supported. To think about these, I tie together what several significant parts of the story seem to mean. I know themes are shown not only by the content of the text, but also in the way it is written.
Supporting Thinking with Text Evidence	I can talk and write about parts of the story that support my thinking.	After deciding on a theme that is important to a story, I can look back on the story, finding textual details from across the text that support that theme.	I can cite details that support each of several themes, keeping straight which details support which themes. I don't just summarize—I also sometimes quote. I know the exact words used can help convey the theme.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression

Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5

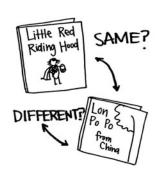

INTERPRETIVE READING

Comparing and Contrasting Story Elements and Themes When I read books in a text set or series, I can talk about how the major events across the two books are similar or different. I can also talk about how other story elements are partly the same and partly different—like the characters, setting, or the life lessons (the themes).

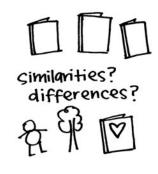

I can discuss similarities and differences in stories, noticing theme. For example, "Is the theme similar but different? How is it developed differently?" (E.g., in one, a girl saves her friend, in another, the boy saves a dog, but both show that friendship takes risk.) I can also compare other aspects of the stories. I ask myself, "Do characters from the texts react in similar ways to an issue?"

I can compare and contrast two different versions of the same text (e.g., comparing the book and the movie version of a text).

When I'm shown several texts in the same genre that explore the same theme, I can explain how that theme is the same and different across the texts.

I can also explain how the theme is developed differently in the two texts and discuss author's craft to do so. I think, "Does one use a symbolic object to show the theme? Does another show the internal thoughts of the villain to convey that villains aren't all bad?"

Supporting
Thinking with
Text Evidence

I can give details from each book to explain my ideas.

I can support my thinking with exact details and examples from the text.

I can support my thinking with exact details and examples from the text, including specific quotes.

ANALYTIC READING

Analyzing Parts of a Story in Relation to the Whole When asked to talk about the importance of a part of a story to the whole, I use what I know about story structure to name what part of the story it is: the setting? The problem?

I can also think about how the part is important to the whole story. If it is the setting, for example, I think "How is this particular setting important to the story?"

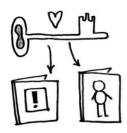

When asked, I can take one part or aspect of a story—an event, setting, minor character—and talk about the importance of it to the whole story. To do this, I use what I know about how one part of a story connects to another or to the whole story (e.g., a scene may explain a later choice a character makes or show that the character is changing; a setting creates a mood or explains the tension).

When asked, I can take one part or aspect of a story—an event, setting, minor character—and talk about the importance of it to the whole story. To do this, I use what I know about how one part of a story connects to another or to the whole story (e.g., a scene may explain a later choice a character makes or show that the character is changing; a setting may be symbolic).

I can also discuss if this part supports a larger idea or theme in the text.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression

Grade 3 Grade 4 Grade 5

ANALYTIC READING

Analyzing Author's Craft

I know that just as I write different leads to a story, choosing the one that works best, authors do that, too. And just like I elaborate on the most important parts, authors also do that.

I notice when the author has done something that stands out— elaborated on a part, used an image or line repeatedly, used figurative language, begun or ended a text in an unusual way—and I think, "Why did the author do that?"

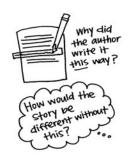

My answer shows that I think about how the author's choice supports something important to the story.

I know that just as I write different leads to a story, choosing the one that works best, authors do that, too. And just like I elaborate on the most important parts, authors also do that.

I notice when the author has done something that stands out— elaborated on a part, used an image or line repeatedly, used figurative language, begun or ended a text in an unusual way—and I think, "Why did the author do that?"

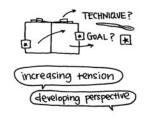

I might begin to think about what the author's words show (e.g., a character's traits or what a story is really about).

When parts of a text stand out, I think about the technique the author used and the goal that the author may have been aiming to achieve.

I use literary language to name these techniques and goals, using phrases like The author uses flashback to increase tension, or The author repeats a line to support the theme.

I can talk at length about techniques and goals. One way to do this is to discuss how the text would have been different had the author made different choices: "Had he or she written . . . the effect would have been different because . . ." and so on.

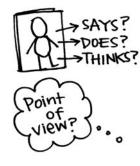

Had she written...

Analyzing Perspective

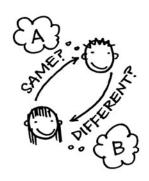

When asked about a character's perspective, I can talk about how the character feels about something important to the story (another character, the setting, an event).

I use what the character does, says, and thinks to support my ideas.

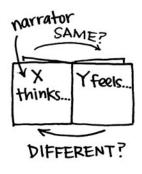

When asked about a character's perspective, I can talk about how the character feels about something important in the story (other characters, the setting, an event).

I use everything I know about the character's life experience (where he or she is from, what groups he or she belongs to) to explain why the character feels this way.

When asked, I can talk about how different characters have different perspectives about events, characters, settings, and issues.

I consider the characters' different life experiences as well as the roles they play in their lives (daughter, friend, student, and so on) to compare and explain their perspectives.

Narrative Reading Learning Progression
	Grade 3	Grade 4	Grade 5
ANALYTIC READING
Critical Reading Growing Ideas	When I read fiction, I get ideas and information about the world. I might be learning about places, growing ideas about families, or thinking about my friendships.	I can choose to let the story I'm reading spark ideas as I read. Those ideas might be about the world, other people, a topic I read about, or the story itself. If appropriate, I develop my ideas by paying attention to the text. I use my ideas as a lens for rethinking or rereading.	Sometimes I read a story with the lens of my own interests. I might weigh the pros and cons of rural life, for example. I find the parts of the book that develop my inquiry and often end up reading other texts that relate, synthesizing information from more than one place.
	ARR AR		PROS/CONS +/- PERSPECTIVES ÖÖ THEMES &
Questioning the Text	I notice when characters' experiences don't match my own, and I think about how they are different. I notice when something happens in a text that is not fair, and I think about why it is not fair and what could have happened instead.	As characters come to terms with issues, I know that the author is helping the reader to come to terms with these issues also. I read what an author writes, asking, "What is it you want me to think/feel?" I also think about what an author wants me to think or feel, and I am willing to be critical. I ask myself, "Do	I consider what a text is saying about an issue and what values the text seems to show as good ones. I think about whether I agree or disagree. I can talk back to texts, critiquing how characters are portrayed or what actions they take.
	That's unfair because Instead	What is it you want me to think/feel? Do I agree?	Do I agree or disagree?	